Local is better

You're probably aware that eating local food is healthier, more environmentally friendly and just plain better tasting. Green Living believes that being a locavore – a word for someone who eats food that is grown within 100-mile radius from home – also has a tremendous impact on our sense of well-being. Whether we recognize it or not, strong community bonds are formed when we shop for food from sources who live just around the corner.

Buying local supports micro-scale farmers in Ontario, cycling money through the community and ensuring a lifetime of the freshest, greenest, easily accessible, affordable good eats possible. Of course, we may not recognize this in the moment; we're just enjoying a leisurely trip to the local market with our family, a conversation with our local butcher, or biting into an exquisite strawberry tenderly grown by farmer Smith. This kind of community experience, the social glue of life, is just another perk of eating local.

Three years ago, along with Evergreen and Slow Food, we created Farm Fresh Fare (FFF), a sampling venue at the Green Living Show that showcases local food provided by Ontario farmers and prepared by talented chefs. We were inspired by food fairs like those put on by Evergreen. Thanks to Toyota Canada's support, for just $2 a sample, anyone can experience the benefits of eating sustainable, local food. The broad swath of FFF participants – from Hearty Catering and Marben to two community kitchens, The Stop Community Food Centre and FoodShare – demonstrates that there really are no limits to who can eat local.

We hope you're inspired by the farmers and chefs at FFF, and that you'll reference this guide, created with support from the Ontario Market Investment Fund, at home to be green and eat local as often as possible!

The benefits of being a locavore

Our lives revolve around food – we nourish our bodies with it, but we also celebrate, entertain and express affection with it. So it's no surprise that we all want only the healthiest, freshest, best-tasting food. In order to serve the best, and by proxy, create a myriad of other positive effects, we need to shop for local, Ontario-grown foods.

8 reasons to buy local

1. It's better for everyone's bottom line

When we shop for local foods, we are getting the satisfaction of knowing that we are contributing to our local communities and economies. For example, research out of Brock University suggests $3 billion would be added to the local economy if five million Ontarians spent $10 of their grocery budget on local foods each week. You don't always have to spend more to shop for local food; in some cases it can cost less because in-season foods are generally cheaper and travel costs are minimized.

2. It supports the future of farming in Ontario

The stronger our local farmer gets, the more we ensure local goods can be grown and raised for generations to come.

3. It promotes biodiversity Our demand for local food creates greater variety. Farmers who run community-supported agriculture programs, sell at farmers' markets and provide for local restaurants have the support they need to raise more types of produce and livestock than multinational commercial enterprises looking to squeeze every dollar out of one type of crop.

4. It promotes cultural diversity

Many local Ontario farmers are growing varieties of “culturally diverse” ingredients locally so traditional recipes from different heritages can still be honoured and prepared – fresh – in Ontario.

5. It empowers consumers Shopping locally gives us a chance to engage our Ontario growers directly.

Building a relationship with farmers is fun – who doesn't love a trip to the farmers' market? We get to learn something new about our food, including when the freshest produce is in-season. And we are reassured when we ask growers directly about sustainable production, including whether pesticides are used. It's important to ask about sustainable growing practices because buying local does not automatically mean the food is sustainably produced.

6. It promotes a greater sense of family

When we buy local foods, we are encouraged and inspired by our food. Who doesn't spy a brimming basket of apples and think, “homemade apple pie!” We hit the kitchen, whipping up favourite family recipes and applying our creative juices. And then, we get to savour the bounty with loved ones, enjoying the experience slowly, talking about the effort and the end result (rather than wolfing down pre-made reconstituted food with the TV on!).

7. It boosts our well-being

Of course, when local foods are grown sustainably, using humane animal practices and without pesticides and chemical fertilizers, we can also be confident that our food is healthier and environmentally friendly. So every time you buy Ontario-produced food, you can feel good knowing you are making a difference.

8. It tastes better! Finally, local foods taste better because they are in-season, recently harvested and didn't have to travel far to get to our plates. Check out how gourmet chefs prepare fresh, local ingredients, starting on page 9.

How to eat local

Opting for locally grown foods simply means buying foods that are produced as close to home as possible. Affordable, fresh Ontario-grown foods are available at farmers' markets, but also in grocery stores throughout the year (check labels for the origins of produce), and restaurants that choose to make the most of the freshest, in-season ingredients. You can also support small-scale, local Ontario farmers, and ensure that local food continues to grow as close to home as possible by participating in a community shared agriculture program that has fresh Ontario-grown produce, meat and eggs delivered to your door. (Google search "CSA" in your community.)

Know your labels

Foodland Ontario This symbol is an easy way to identify Ontario foods at grocery stores, farmers' markets and on-farm markets.

Local Food Plus This symbol represents certification for local sustainable food producers (and restaurants and retailers) who reduce or eliminate pesticide use, treat their animals well, conserve soil and water, protect wildlife habitat, provide safe and fair working conditions, reduce energy use, and sell locally wherever possible.

Organic labels Not all foods labelled organic are local. But you can be comforted by knowing you are still doing the planet a favour by opting for foods that aren't produced using nasty pesticides. Look for Pro-cert and Ecocert, two large organic certifying bodies.

Glossary of terms

Eliminate any confusion at the counter: here are the key terms you need to know when shopping for food that is accessible, healthy and environmentally friendly.

Sustainable agriculture

Food that is produced using methods that are healthy, do not harm the environment, respect labourers, are humane to animals, provide fair wages to farmers and support farming communities. The production methods support local communities and economies, while enriching the soil, protecting air and water and reducing energy. Food biodiversity Biodiversity for food and agriculture includes variety and variability of ecosystems, animals, plants and micro-organism at the genetic, species and ecosystem levels, necessary to sustain both human life and the key functions of ecosystems. Without food biodiversity, entire single-source crops are vulnerable to disease. Industrial agriculture A system that is entirely dependent on fossil fuels, which, when refined and burned, create greenhouse gases and contribute to the climate change. Chemical fertilizers and pesticides are a major contributor to agricultural GHG emissions, and packaging and transportation of food are environmental stressors.

Local food Shopping for sustainable foods supports the production of sustainable agriculture; however, local food is not automatically sustainably produced. Pesticides, chemical fertilizers, factory farming, hormone use and non-therapeutic use of antibiotics can all be involved in local food production. TIP: Local is relative – shop for food items produced as close as possible to where you live, even national over global sources is a step toward eating local.

Natural food This generally refers to foods that are not altered chemically or synthesized in any way. These are derived from natural sources, including animals and plants. These may or may not be organic foods.

Organic food This refers to foods that are produced, manufactured and handled using organic means that are defined by regulating or certifying bodies, generally, as employing no chemical pesticides, fertilizers or preservatives. These may or may not be natural foods.

These delectable, homemade treats, concocted by Lesia Kohut of LPK's Culinary Groove, are best eaten the day they are made, but can be kept refrigerated or frozen and then reheated in a warm oven until toasty. Makes 12 to 16 large (3") doughnuts.

- 3 tbsp active dry yeast
- 3/4 cup milk, warm (not hot)
- 2 cups mix all-purpose and red fife flour (plus extra if dough is wet)
- 1/4 cup homo milk, room temperature
- 2 tbsp Ontario maple sugar

- 1 tsp vanilla extract
- 3 large fresh egg yolks
- 1/4 cup plus 1 tbsp unsalted butter at room temperature
- Sunflower or coconut oil for deep frying

1. Dissolve yeast, 3/4 cup of milk, and 2/3 cup flour into mixing bowl. Cover and let rest in a warm place for five to 10 minutes, until mixture expands and has a bubbly appearance.
2. Fit electric mixer with paddle. Mix in remaining milk on low speed until combined.
3. Mix in remaining flour on low, then medium-low, until combined.
4. Mix in maple sugar, sea salt, vanilla extract and yolks on low speed, then medium-low, until combined.

6. Remove dough from refrigerator. Knead dough a little on counter dusted with flour to smooth and soften it up. Roll out with rolling pin to desired thickness (1/4"-1/2" thick). Using cookie cutters, cut out desired shapes. Place on parchment-lined tray and let rest while oil is heating up.
7. Fill a large pot or sauté pan with sunflower or coconut oil at least 2" deep. Allow at least 2" of clearance from rim of pan. Heat oil to 360°F (160°C) on a candy or deep-fry thermometer.
